Sherri Stormo has over 15 years of business leadership experience in multiple environments, having worked in the corporate world for over 10 years and then starting and running her own business for the past 10 years. During her career, she built a reputation for innovative strategic thinking, operational excellence, and supply chain management.

Sherri has an Electrical Engineering degree and an MBA. She began her career in 2004 at Rockwell Collins, a Fortune 500 company in Iowa. She held multiple positions, including Engineer, Operations Manager and eventually Plant Manager, overseeing operations of several products and 100+ employees.

Moving back home to South Dakota in 2012, Sherri worked remotely for Rockwell Collins managing key suppliers in the Midwest. Sherri eventually followed her entrepreneurial passion and started her own photography business that has been in business for almost 10 years.

Along with her husband, Jason, and their 4 children, she resides in rural South Dakota, just outside of Watertown. She has begun to devote more and more time to the family farm (Tatanka Hills) and is enjoying being a part of the bison industry. They run a cow-calf operation and feedlot, while the other half of their operation is farming.

Sherri is also a board member on her local school board, is one of her church's children's ministry leaders and is a member of their worship team. She devotes time and resources to local nonprofits and is in the process of starting her own nonprofit to encourage kindness and love in today's world.
